A BC Supreme Court justice will rule on conflict of interest allegations against Spallumcheen's mayor later this year.

Justice Peter Rogers heard the arguments Tuesday from both sides and says he'll deliver his written verdict "later this summer or perhaps in the fall".

Armstrong lawyer Danica Djordjevich is representing 39 residents of the township who took the legal action.

They claim mayor Will Hansma (pictured) was in a conflict over a bylaw to amend Spallumcheen's Official Community Plan because he and his sons owned property affected by the bylaw.

Hansma's lawyer says the mayor relied on a legal opinion to proceed, and was not in a position to benefit financially.

If he's found guilty, Hansma could be removed from office.
